THE FEARFUL DOG - Dumb Friends League

Determining why your dog is fearful is not always essential to treating the fearful behavior, although the reason for his fear will dictate the relative success of the treatment A dog that is genetically predisposed to general fearfulness, or a dog that was improperly socialized during a critical stage in the development, will probably not respond as well to treatment as a dog that has

By Karen B. London, PhD

of Help for Your Fearful Dog, "There are lots of fearful dogs, but people call because of the symptoms They rarely say, 'I need help because my dog is fear-ful' They call because their dog is bark-ing at visitors or shredding things" These fear-based behaviors don't improve until the underlying issues have been dealt with Further, as the fear worsens, so does the problem behavior

THE FEARFUL DOG - Arizona Humane Society

The second step to helping your fearful dog is to manage the environment to the best of your ability to limit her exposure to the things she finds scary Continually exposing your dog to something she finds scary will only make the fearful behaviors worse During times when managing your dog's environment is out of your control, remain calm and do your best to help your dog relax until the
